Denmark's climate change funding to developing countries – Results and ways forward

Wednesday, 30 September 2015, 13:00-16:00

DIIS - Auditorium

Organized by the Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Danish Ministry of Energy, Utilities and Climate and the Danish Institute for International Studies

Since COP15 in Copenhagen in 2009, an increasing amount of funds have been made available for climate related purposes in developing countries. It is however also clear that substantial additional resources will be needed in order to help developing countries deal adequately with climate change, both to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to adapt to the consequences of climate change.
