Syrian Dialogue Initiative for Building a New Syria

With the fall of the oppressive Baath regime, Syria has entered a new phase. In order to successfully navigate this transitional period, we must unite and work together to draw a common roadmap. The policy of exclusion and marginalization that has devastated Syria must end, and all political forces should participate in building the new Syria, including during the transitional period. Therefore, we call on all Syrian parties to reconsider their approaches towards each other and to place common national interests above all other considerations.

Based on this principle, we believe that cooperation between the Democratic Self-Administration and the political administration in Damascus will be in the interest of all Syrians and will contribute to facilitating a successful exit from this difficult phase.

Recognizing our responsibility in the Democratic Self-Administration of North and East Syria towards the Syrian people of all components and spectrums, and in response to what our Syrian people demand of us, we propose this initiative for Syrian-Syrian dialogue to build a new Syria.

We also appreciate the positive role of Arab countries and friends in supporting the Syrian people from all components, and the necessity for this support to continue in building a new Syria that guarantees the rights of all components and spectrums, based on democratic principles that establish a suitable ground for launching an inclusive national Syrian dialogue in which everyone participates.

On this basis, we direct our call to all Syrian forces to work together to achieve these crucial steps that we see as vital at this stage:

1. Preserving the unity and sovereignty of Syrian territory and protecting it from attacks by the Turkish state and its mercenaries.
2. Halting military operations across all Syrian territories to initiate a comprehensive and constructive national dialogue.
3. Adopting a stance of tolerance and distancing from hate speech and accusations among Syrians, as Syria is a country rich in its components and spectrums, and this richness and diversity must be preserved on a fair democratic basis.
4. Convening an emergency meeting involving Syrian political forces in Damascus to unify visions regarding the transitional phase.
5. Ensuring active participation of women in the political process.
6. We emphasize that economic resources should be distributed fairly among all Syrian regions, as they belong to all members of the Syrian people.
